

Project Report Task 4:

A common situation where poor digital communication can cause problems is when a student sends an email to a professor in an informal or unclear manner. For example, a student might write a short message like “Send notes ASAP” without a subject line, proper greeting, or context. This kind of communication can be perceived as rude or careless, even if the student did not intend it that way. As a result, the professor may ignore the email or respond negatively, which can affect the student’s chances of getting help or support.

This situation could have been handled better by writing a clear and polite email. Including a proper subject line, respectful greeting, brief explanation, and a formal closing would make the message more professional. Thoughtful communication helps create a positive impression and increases the likelihood of receiving a helpful response.
