

Task 5 Report

While researching identity theft, what surprised me the most was how easily personal information can be misused without the victim even realizing it for a long time. I always thought such cybercrimes required advanced hacking skills, but I learned that even small mistakes like sharing personal details or clicking on unknown links can lead to serious consequences. It was also surprising to see how attackers take advantage of urgency and trust to manipulate people.

This research made me reflect on my own digital habits. One important change I plan to make is being more careful while sharing information online and verifying links or messages before taking any action. I will also start regularly checking my accounts and enabling additional security features like two-factor authentication. This awareness has helped me understand that staying safe online requires continuous attention and responsible behavior.
